Here's Trivia Quiz On Provo Mayors

How about a mini-quiz testing your knowledge of Provo's past mayors?

1. What early-day Provo mayor was labeled "Bogus Brigham" back in the Nauvoo period after law officers, seeking to take Brigham Young into custody, mistakenly arrested him instead?

2. Who had the longest tenure (13 years) as Provo mayor after already serving 10 years as mayor of Salt Lake City?

3. What two sets of brothers were mayors, serving prior to the turn of the century?

What father and son both served as mayor, 28 years apart?

5. What grandson of a mayor

later served in the position?
6. A nephew of one mayor followed in his uncle's footsteps and wound up serving the second longest tenure of all Provo mayors. Who is he?

7. Where can a citizen view portraits of all 36 former mayors?

Let's talk about the last question first.

Thanks to the dedicated efforts of the now-retired Larson Studio — headed by the late T. . (Chris) Larson and his son O. Blaine — pictures of past may-ors were located, enlarged and attractively framed.

The portraits are displayed in the City Center's council chamber, each with an identification which lists plate the years served.

Chris Larson undertook the project in the early 30s after receiving the blessing of the mayor then in office. Just locating portraits of some of the pioneer-era mayors was a great challenge. So was restoring and enlarging the poorer quality pho-

For awhile, finding a picture of Ellis Eames, first Provo mayor (1851-52) seemed hope-less. Then, recalls Blaine Larson, a Salt Lake columnist wrote a story that brought a call from a woman descendant of Eames.

She had a picture!

The photo display amounts to impressive memorial that helps preserve a phase of Provo's history and heritage. Other photographers are carrying on the tradition now, but the imagination, expertise and service of the Larsons should not be forgotten.

On with answers to the quiz:

1. William Miller, Provo's eighth mayor (1864-67) figured in the December 1845 strategm that foiled unfriendly officers waiting outside the Nauvoo Temple to arrest Brigham Young.

Wearing Brigham's hat and Heber C. Kimball's cloak, Miller left the temple and was about to enter Young's coach when the marshal arrested him on charge of "counterfeiting t

U.S. coin.'

Miller argued he was innocent but nobody asked him his name or whether he was Brigham Young until after a two-hour trip to Carthage with a posse. There embarrassed officers learned the truth.

2. Abraham O. Smoot was Provo's mayor 1868-81. Combined with his Salt Lake mayoral service, this gave him a fantastic 23 years as first citizen of the two cities.

3. Benjamin K. Bullock was ar third mayor (1855-60). His our brother Isaac, a lawyer, was in his early months as the sixth mayor when called on a church mission to Great Britain. Benjamin K. finished out his term of office

Wilson H. Dusenberry was the 10th mayor (1882-89); his brother Warren N. was the 12th one (1892-93). The two brothers are remembered for founding the school that later became Brigham Young Academy. War-ren was the BYA's first principal.

4. Alma Van Wagenen's may-orship (1928-29) was duplicated by his son Harold (1956-57), first mayor under the Council-man-ager system which Provo tried for a period at that time. 5. A. O. (Owen) Smoot III, grandson of Abraham O., was mayor in 1934-35 — after he'd served as county commissioner and Provo postmaster.

and Provo postmaster.
6. Verl G. Dixon's uncle LeRoy Dixon was mayor 1918-21. Verl served a 12-year mayoral stint 1962-73 after being a county commissioner. He had the added distinction of heading, in turn, both the Utah Association of County Officials and the Utah Municipal League Municipal League.

We'll complete these highlights on Provo's mayors in a future column.

LDS Church May Aid Moon in Tax Case

SALT LAKE CITY (UPI) -The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is giving seri-ous considering to filing a brief with the U.S. Supreme Court in support of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's appeal of a tax evasion conviction Wilford W. Kirton, a church attorney, said the church's main concern is whether a decision upholding the verdict against Moon would set a precedent allowing government and the courts to define what is and the courts to define what is and isn't a relgious activity.

"The trial judge said it was up to the jury to determine what was and wasn't a religious activity of Rev. Moon," said Kirton. "That issue could be very important to religions generally, and that issue seems to be presented in the Moon to be presented in the Moon case.

Joy Garrett, New York spokeswoman for the Unifica-tion Church said Moon's lawyers "are receiving inquiries from groups from the right to left, from orthodox to unorthodox. For once, all (of them) are on the same side because of the impact of the case on their own particular religious practices."

Garrett said the Southern Christian Leadership Conference has announced its support and she expects support from the Roman Catholic Church and the National Council of Churches.

Moon, leader of the Unificafiled an appeal Church, last week of his conviction in a New York federal district court of evading taxes on $162,-000 from a bank account and a church-owned importing business. He was sentenced to 18 months in prison and a $25,000 fine. A federal appeals court later upheld the conviction and the sentence.

The issue of whether government, or only churches them-selves, can define what activi-ties are "religous" and thus ties are "religous" and thus eligible for various legal pro-tections came up recently in a Utah case against the Mormon Church.

The plaintiff in the case was maintence worker at a church-owned gymnasium who was fired because he was inactive in the Mormon Church. The suit alleged the firing was an action of religious discrimi-

The church argued the worker was engaged in a religious activity and that such activities are exempted from federal equal employment law. The church argued it should define which of its activites are religious and which are nonreligious.

However, U.S. District Judge David K. Winder ruled the job was not religious and was subject to anti-discrimination law.
